ONE OF MAINE'S TYPICAL SCENES OF LAKE, MOUNTAIN AND SKY

Pine Tree League

With more than a half dozen postponed games to be played and deadlocked scores to be played off before Sept. 7, it is doubtful if the Pine Tree League schedule is completed this season. Rain has put the finishing touches on a season, while successful from a financial standpoint for the most part, does not measure up to other years.

Wilton was knocked out of first place, Wednesday, by Norway, with Jack McCarthy in the box. Livermore taking one from Rumford, stepped into that place and at present is surveying the baseball landscape from the champion's berth. Oxford secured a firmer hold on third place in defeating Mechanic Falls.

The teams have a week or more to go and there is a chance for many surprises during that time.

Norway 2; Wilton 0

Norway capped the lid on Wilton, Wednesday afternoon and yanked the Pine Tree leaders from the top seat. Jack McCarthy in the box for Norway, delivered a fine brand and held the Wilton Champs to four scattered bingles. He drew three hits on four times up, one being a double.

Methodist

Rev. W. W. Lyon, minister. 10.30, morning service; 12.00, church Sunday school; 7.30, special drama and gospel sermon.

Last Sunday, August 24, was a big day at the Methodist Church. The usual attendance, with some additional summer people were on hand at the morning service. The full vested choir was once more in its place, beginning its Fall work of anthem singing. The minister preached a very helpful sermon from the 14th chapter of Matthew's Gospel and the special singing was an inspiration to the morning gathering.

In the evening there was the largest crowd in attendance that has been in the church since the advent of the new Methodist minister. A Mrs. Miller from New York City delighted the evening crowd with the special solos which were tremendously enjoyed. The pastor told the audience, as well as Mrs. Miller, that she had the rare privilege of possessing a voice that had wonderful volume, as well as a superb sweetness and quality. Many people remained after the service to thank Mr. and Mrs. Miller for such a splendid evening of song. Mrs. Agnes L. Morton came over again from South Paris to delightfully accompany Mrs. Miller at the organ. The minister, Rev. Mr. Lyon, gave a half hour's most interesting dissertation on the story of the "Disciples being tossed on the sea in a craft." It was altogether a beautiful and fitting service with which to close the gloaming hours of the Lord's Day.

Next Sunday morning, by special arrangement, Mr. Lyon has procured his friend, Erle Renwick, who is the morning soloist in the Lafayette Presbyterian Church on Fifth Ave., New York City, to come over to the Norway Methodist Church next Sabbath morning, August 31, and sing for the people. The pastor feels that in securing Mr. Renwick, it is one of the finest treats in the world of song. Next Sunday evening the pastor is to give his interpretation of the 5 act drama "The Servant in the House." There will be a lively song service with special singing and a big crowd is expected. This drama story is the first that is to be given in the Fall and Winter program of Rev. Mr. Lyon's schedule. Everybody is welcome. Come at 7:30 when the bells call you.

Mrs. Francis Buzzell delightfully entertained, Saturday evening, at a shower given in honor of Miss Daphne Barker, whose marriage to James Buzzell will be an early fall event. Miss Barker knew nothing about the party whatever, but motored over from South Paris that night, expecting to attend a card party at her aunt's, Mrs. Marion Allen's. However, during the early evening, she was called to meet Mr. Buzzell at the train and during that time, twenty-five of her friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mrs. Francis Buzzell and when Mr. Buzzell and Miss Barker returned, they were gathered in a room which Mrs. Francis Buzzell had been redecorating in the early summer.

After Mr. James and Miss Daphne had arrived at his father's home, they were requested to come to Mrs. Francis Buzzell's home for a little while. After they arrived and had talked a short time, Mrs. Buzzell invited Daphne to see her room which she had finally completed. When the light was turned on, Miss Daphne was taken completely by surprise, upon observing the room full of relatives and friends, and a large table laden with many nice and useful presents, a large pink umbrella was suspended from the ceiling. When she recovered her composure and upon invitation of Mrs. Francis Buzzell to undo her packages, and to begin particularly with one bundle which called for a reach, a string was pulled and down came a shower of confetti. Much merriment resulted from the undoing of the packages and the jingles which accompanied them. Games and refreshments finished a very enjoyable evening.

Hart Crane—Part II

In order to give you an idea of the all-inclusive range and scope of "The Bridge" let me quote parts of Hart Crane's latest work that give the general sweeping character of the outset the element of time bridge's constant observation of the flux.

"How many dawns, chill from his rippling rest
The seagull's wings shall dip and pivot him,
Shedding white wings of tumult, building high
Over the chained bay waters Liberty—",

Thus the first verse. And the last verse of the invocation calls forth the bridge to "lend a myth to God."

"O sleepless as the river under thee,
Vaulting the sea, the prairies' dreaming sod,
Unto us lovelier sometime sweep, descend
And of the curveship lend a myth to God."

And in the myth of America first comes Columbus:

"I thought of Genoa; and this truth, now proved,
That made me exile in her streets, stood me
More absolute than ever—bidding the moon
Till dawn should clear that dim frontier, first seen
—The Chan's great continent . . .
Then faith, not fear
Nigh surged me witless . . . Hearing the surf near—
I, wonder-breathing, kept the watch,—saw
The first palm chevron the first lighted hill."

(In the last line we see Crane's use of the noun as a verb.)

And then in "The Harbor Dawn":

"Insistently through sleep—a tide of voices—
They meet you listening midway in your dream.
The long, tired sounds, fog-insulated noises:
Gongs in white surplices, beshrouded wails,
Far strum of fog horns. . . signals dispersed in veils."

In "Van Winkle":

"Macadam, gun-grey as the tunny's belt,
Leaps from Far Rockaway to Golden Gate:
Listen! the miles a hurdy-gurdy grinds—
Down gold arpeggios mile on mile unwinds.
There was Priscilla's cheek close in the wind,
And Captain Smith, all bear and certainty,
And Rip Van Winkle bowing by the way,—
Is this Sleepy Hollow, Friend—?
Have you got your "Times"—?
And hurry along, Van Winkle—it's getting late!"

"Stick your patent name on a sign board
brother—all over—going west—young man
Tintex—Japalac—Certain-teed
Overalls ads
and land sakes! under the new play-bill ripped in the guaranteed corner—see Bert Williams what?
Minstrels when you steal a chicken just save me the wing for if it isn't
Erie it ain't for miles around a
Mazda—and the telepraghic night coming on Thomas
a Ediford—and whistling down the tracks
a headlight rushing with the sound—can you imagine—while an express makes time like
Science—commerce and the holy-ghost
Radio roars in every house we have the North Pole
Wall Street and virginibirth without stones or wives or even running brooks connecting ears and no more sermons windows flashing roar breathtaking—as you like it. . . eh?
Time's rendings, time's blendings, they construe
As final reckonings of fire and snow:
Strange bird-wit, like the elemental gist
Of unwalled winds they offer, singing low
My Old Kentucky Home and Casey Jones,
Some Sunny Day. I heard a road-gang chanting so.
The River, spreading, flows—and spends your dream.
What are you, lost within the tideless spell?
You are your father's father, and the stream—
A liquid theme that floating niggers retell.
Damp tonnage and alluvial march of days—
Nights turbid, vascular with silted shale
And roots surrendered down of manraine clays:
The Mississippi drinks the farthest dale.

The last bits all from "The River," which is the most intense and vivid of the sections under "Powhatan's Daughter." And in "The Dance" the poet calls up the spirit of Pocohontas.

"We danced, O Brave, we danced beyond their farms,
In cobalt desert closures made our vows. .
Now is the strong prayer folded in thine arms
The serpent with the eagle in the boughs"

Romance and sentiment in "Indiana" of which the following is the last verse:

"Come back to Indiana—not too late!
(Or will you be a ranger to the end?)
Good-bye. . . Good-bye. . . oh, I shall always wait
You, Larry, traveller — stranger,
son,
my friend—"

"Cutty Sark" and "Cape Hatteras" are poems of the sea and in these Hart Crane excels. It is impossible to give the beauty that Hart Crane expresses in these two pieces, but here is a smack of the rythm in "Cutty Sark":

"Blithe Yankee vanities, turreted sprites, winged British repartees, skillful savage sea-girls that bloomed in the Spring—Heave, weave those bright designs the trade winds drive. . .
Sweet opium and tea, Yo-ho!
Pennies for porpoises that bank the keel!
Fins whip the breeze around Japan!
Bright skysails ticketing the Line, wink round the Horn to Frisco, Melbourne. . . Pennants, parabolas—clipper dreams indelible and ranging, baronial white on lucky blue!
Perennial-Cutty-trophied-Sark!"

In "Cape Hatteras" Hart Crane calls upon his poetic father.

"—Recorders ages hence"—ah, syllables of faith!
Wait, tell me, Walt Whitman, if infinity
Be still the same as when you walked the beach
Near Paumanok—your lone patrol—and heard the wraith
Through surf, its bird note there a long time failing. .
For you, the panoramas and this breed of towers,
Of you—the these that's statured in the cliff.
O Saunterer on free ways still ahead!"

And the airplane:

"Behind the dragon's covey—amphibian, ubiquitous
To hedge the seaboard, wrap the headland, ride
The blue's cloud-templed districts unto ether. . .
This tournament of space, the threshed and chiselled height,
Is baited by marauding circles."
While Cetus-like, O thou Dirigible, enormous Lounger
Of pendulous auroral beaches,—satellited wide
By convoy planes, moonferrets that rejoin thee
On fleeing balconies as thou dost glide,
—Hast splintered space!"

Walt Whitman still is an influence in our lives, Hart Crane believes, with his idea of universal brotherhood and this contemporary poet wants to go

"yes, Walt
Afoot again, an onward without halt,—
Not soon, nor suddenly,—no, never to let go my hand
in yours,
Walt Whitman—
so—"

Well, there is still more to say on "The Bridge."

—Henry Davis Nadig.

Carroll-Kane

At Harrison, on Friday, August 22, at the residence of Mrs. Albert F. Richardson, grandmother of the bride, Miss Phyllis Richardson Kane, was united in marriage to William Hobson Carroll, of Brooklyn, New York.

The ceremony was performed by the Reverend Marcus H. Carroll, father of the groom, of Randolph, Mass., formerly rector of St. Andrew's Church, Hanover, Mass., and of St. John's Church, Saugus. The brother of the groom, Robert B. Carroll, acted as best man; and the bride was attended by Miss Doris Dow, as maid of honor, and by two bridesmaids, Miss Ruth Alquist and Miss Elizabeth Mason; her little niece, Lorraine Tolman, was flower girl.

The marriage ceremony took place on the lawn of Mrs. Richardson's residence on Tolman Road, where a canopy had been erected for the occasion under two stately pine trees. The bridal procession, led by the bridesmaids, marched to the music of "The Bridal Chorus" from Wagner's "Lohengrin", returning, at the conclusion of the service, accompanied by the wedding march from the incidental music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn, under the direction of Mrs. Laura Tolman Kilgore.

The bride was tastefully gowned in point d'esprit, wearing a satin girdle and a "picture hat", her hands partially covered by dainty silk lace mitts. She carried a shower bouquet of white bridal roses and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor wore a dress of jade green chiffon, a girdle of satin and hat the same color, silver shoes and also carried a bouquet of brides roses. The bridesmaids were dressed, the one in yellow tulle and the other in blue point d'esprit, both carrying bouquets of sweet peas and bridal wreath. The little flower girl wore a dainty frock of blue and satin bandeau. The father of the bride, Roy Adelbert Kane, gave the bride away. Mr. Kane was formerly principal of the grammar school in Haverhill, Mass.

Mr. Carroll is engaged in the engineering department of the American Telephone Company in New York City; and the bride is assistant librarian at the Montague Library in Brooklyn.

DAD AND SON, INCORPORATED

For three years Judge Francis B. Allegretti has sat in the Boys' Court in Chicago. There he has heard the cases of more than twenty-five thousand boys charged with various crimes and misdemeanors ranging from breaking windows to breaking heads and his experience has crystallized in the belief that the most effective combination against crime is, "Dad and Son."

During the recent Boys' Week in Chicago, Judge Allegretti drew up a set of working rules for this partnership which the newspaper headed, "The Ten Commandments for Fathers":

1. Love your boy with all your heart.
2. Make his care, education and training one of the major purposes of your life. Choose his schools by the character they build.
3. Keep the family and home life attractive and wholesome.
4. Train him to keep his body clean and healthy.
5. Remember your son learns best by example; therefore be exemplary in conduct and speech before him.
6. Protect him with your life if necessary.
7. Enforce obedience, but let your rules be reasonable and helpful.
8. Know the company he keeps and remember that one bad apple soon spoils the barrel.
9. Teach him love of country and respect for law.
10. Teach him religion, reverence and love of God, and to be of kindly service to his neighbor.

St. Lawrence in the Away Back

Don C. Seitz

From the Christian Leader

One reminiscence usually provokes another. The recent references in the Christian Leader concerning the requirements of the theological department of St. Lawrence University move me to some further reflections. In a previous article I have noted my family's hegira from Attica, Ohio, to Canton, in St. Lawrence County, New York. Father had preceded mother, sister, Europa and myself, living in Richardson Hall previous to our joining him late in the fall of 1871. The great Chicago fire had cast its shadow over the land just before we started, and my last memory of good John and Eliza Myers, two of our farmer friends, was helping the former to load a wagon with wheat to be sent the sufferers. Then we started for the far North, as it indeed was.

I had never seen an evergreen save on a lawn before the big Ernest mansion at Attica. We started before dawn to be driven in a spring wagon to the railroad, then four miles away. The train and the sun came together, and I glued my small nose to the car window, missing nothing en route. When we crossed the gorge at Ashtabula, there were some wild evergreens clinging to its sides. Erie, Dunkirk and Buffalo followed. Thence we journeyed to Rome, there to transfer to the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, as it was then known. This did not go direct to Canton, but parted with us at a desolate place called De Kalb Junction, then to my eyes the loneliest and most forbidding place in the whole world. It has not changed much in the interim.

Father met us here and in an hour or so we had arrived at our destination. The Booths were there ahead of us and we went to dwell together in the little "Haley" house opposite the fine Whitney mansion, on the road to Little River, which ran near by to join the River Grasse a short way below. Father had been writing me delightful little letters printed out so that they could be easily read. I have them still, and am sometimes moved to print them as models for other fathers to follow when writing to small sons.

The first acquaintances I made were the Sykes family, mother, Nellie, Fred and Dick. Mr. Sykes was the college steward and fed the animals lodged in Richardson Hall, with the aid of two smart French Canadian girls who were great favorites. Father had sometimes written mother that he was getting too much "sheep", which was his humorous way of referring to mutton. We never ate "sheep" in Ohio, beef, pork, chicken and turkey being the staples. Just because of his comments, it was years before I could be persuaded to touch mutton. Fred and Nellie Sykes were grown, but Dick was a little fellow of my own size and near my age. May I be excused for speaking so lightly of the Rev. Richard Eddy Sykes, D. D., president of St. Lawrence University! The trouble is one never knows what will happen to a boy when he grows up.

The elder Sykes had been a stone mason and helped build that Bunker Hill monument, which is the glory of Boston. He lived to be ninety-five years of age. His youngest son then gave small promise of ever becoming a doctor of divinity, much less a college president. He was fond of scrapping, and tackled me early in our acquaintance—and got the worst of it. I had, and still have, a good head of hair. It does not hurt to have it pulled. Dick was not aware of this advantage, and fastened his stout fingers in my locks, thus employing both hands. I had discovered the existence of a "tickle spot" on his right side, and my paws being unoccupied, even though underneath, I soon compelled him to surrender. Golden curls then graced his occiput. I will give $10 for any trace of one that can be discovered today.

The theologues were a great lot. Father used to let me attend Prof. Orello Cone's class in Biblical languages, where I picked up the Greek alphabet and a bit of Hebrew, which I have never forgotten. The students were mostly mature. Preble for one, had been a sailor on board a war-ship in the civil conflict not long over. He was very agile. Miss Chaffee, sister of a theologue, later a well-known minister, was conducting a class in elocution. She came in one day while the bunch was pantomiming Horace Greeley carrying B. Gratz Brown, his candidate for Vice President—this was in 1872—with an exhibition of pick-a-back, while Preble and some nimble ones were jumping over a table. Green, a great favorite of mine, missed his guess and came down in the middle of it just as the prim lady opened the door. There was some dusting!

Just before coming North I had seen my first circus and was full of it. The next spring we organized a show on the ground, making a tent of rag carpets. It did not do well because a boy named Herbert F. Gunnison had made a "panorama" out of a cigar box and a lot of pictures pasted on a strip, which he gave peeps at for one pin. We asked five, as I remember, and showed to an empty house. By "we" I mean the D. D. and myself.

The Sunday school in the Universalist church interested me. One of my fellow class members, John L. Heaton, has been with me much since 1892. So has H. F. G. of the competing panorama. The big thing was an Easter show, with tableaus. You have no idea how lovely Florence Lee Whitman was in white and golden curls, clinging to the cross in "Rock of Ages!" Who would suppose that she would grow up to be a member of the City Council in Cambridge, Mass.?

Prof. J. S. Lee's family were the life of the college. He taught a lot of things and gave wonderful talks on the Holy Land, wearing a fez for color. Leslie, his oldest son, was already a professor at Bowdoin College, Clarence, recently of Gloucester, Mass., was in school, and Fred, destined to be the most learned of them all, played with the rest of us. I recall that he had a gold-filled front tooth which added radiance to a most charming smile. The two daughters were much admired. All of us small boys hung May-baskets to the Lee door knob. Mrs. Lee taught painting. I remember when the elders came home from an exhibition of her pupil's work, filled with glee because Booth had discovered that in a picture painted by Dr. Fisher's daughter the perspective had been mixed so that a fox's tail reached the entire length of a great forest.

There were some lively boys in the Academic Department, as the college end was known; Walter B. Gunnison, Foster L. Backus, and W. A. Poste. The last two became lawyers of renown in Brooklyn and New York. Walter B. Gunnison took a turn as president of St. Lawrence. So did Clarence Lee. As you have said truly, Almon Gunnison put the old school on the map and Richard Eddy Sykes is making it an institution. More power to him. I sent a daughter to the college, but never went there myself—or to any other.

Herbert F. Gunnison was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, I in Portage, Wood County, Ohio. Neither is a place to brag about. His father and mine had preached in Norway, Maine, lived in the same parsonage. When it came to fixing on a place to hail from we divided fairly, he taking Canton and I Norway. The Irishman who said a man ought to be proud of his native place whether he was born there or not, must have had us in mind.

Old Canton is also memorable for the Rev. Absalom Gaines. He was, I think, head of the Academic Department in my day, later over all. He was a man of the profoundest learning, whose son and grandson are still with the college, both highly esteemed. Both are "Charlies". The elder was always deliberate of speech. I recall in after years when Dr. Preble was visiting me in New York, he mentioned having met him on the street in Canton, and to his own bood brisk good morning he got a prompt reply. This puzzled Preble until he worked out a theory that "Charlie had probably been saluted by some one else half a mile back, and he came along just in time to meet the response.

One fellow student with my father remains yet in Canton, the greatly respected Dr. James M. Payson. I recall no other survivors.

In those days it was required that theologues should write out sermons for submission to the faculty, with stern Dr. Ebenezer E. Fisher sitting in higher judgement. Father stuck to the habit until it nearly gave him nervous prostration, and then summoned up the courage to preach extemporaneously. The result was a transformation in power and eloquence, greatly welcomed by his congregation, which, I fear, had before that formed the habit of counting pages as they were turned. Anyway, thereafter he slept nights and the listeners remained awake in their pews.

In my occasional visits to Canton I have missed among the theologues that robustness of mind and body which prevailed among them at the time of which I write. Most of them seem to have been caught too young. The pulpit requires seasoned timber. The men whom I knew had faced the world and knew its table of contents.

Two Thousand Dollar Fire

Fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the home of J. J. MacMillan Tuesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. MacMillan were awakened by one of the children, who hearing the crackling of the burning building, was frightened and came crying to their room. The father and mother and five children had barely time to escape in their night clothes. The building, which consisted of a story and a half house and stable, were burned, with their contents, except for a cow and pig.

The loss is estimated at $2,000 or more, with a small insurance. The family, at present, is finding shelter with neighbors.

The cast consisted of a teacher, Miss Mabel Beardon, and pupils who were dressed to represent days of long ago. Following the play, which caused much merriment there were vocal solos by Herbert Carter, Harold Green, Harold Bartlett and Miss Margaret Carter. Trombone solo by James Swan of New Hampshire, Mrs. F. CRIME PREVENTION IMPORTANT "To prevent crime is a far wiser thing than merely to punish it," says Governor Rosevelt of New York. Probably everyone will agree with this. The disagreement comes in discussing the means of prevention.

Many American authorities believe that our zeal for passing laws stands as a barrier to crime prevention. Every law makes new criminals. The result is judicial chaos and an increase in the red tape surounding our legal system.

At present, a strong effort is being made to pass a Federal anti-revolver law on the supposition that if criminals were disarmed crimes of violence would decrease. This is true. The fallacy lies in the fact that no law in the world can prevent the underworld from obtaining arms. All such a law would do would be to prevent good citizens from owning guns for protection or sport.

Prevent crimes by weeding out obsolete laws, divorcing judicial administration from politics, improving our police system and making punishment sure.

THE LITTLE MEADOW BROOK

W. H. Lord

Coming down the mountain,
Carrying, carrying, on;
Whistling to the hemlocks
And the sparkling sun.
Dodging rocks and tree-trunks,
Floating brush and all;
Kissing its old sweetheart,
Blessed water-fall.
Washing out the fence-posts,
Taking wood and all;
Sinking in the land-mark,
Ancient, old stone-wall.
Rushing to the meadow,
Making fens and moors;
Drinking from the hill-side
Through its hidden spores.
Runs Little Meadow Brook,
Lordly, and sublime,
Its character is iron;
It moves on sands of time—
Sire! Yea, sagely prophet,
In thy strangely way,
Art thou one of many
Features of the day?
Doth thy work seem weary?
Is thy journey long?
Why art thou so merry?
Give me just one song.
Tell me that you love me
Angel, God-like form;
Whether it be wind-blow
Hail, or thunderstorm.
There are none else like thee,
None so fair or sweet;
Nothing so ethereal,
Nothing so complete.
When I mow the meadow
And the sun beats down,
When the old sweat's spurting
From my dirty gown.
I can see you with me,
As the white clouds sway;
And I mow the tall grass,
Round and round all day.
Oh! its recreation
When I want a drink,
To lay me down, beside
Nature's cool, cool brink.
Then, I pull together,
Well-refreshed again;
And bless that sparkling stream,
Watering the fen.
Gosh! I'm in my glory
When I stroll to fish;
For, there' I yank 'em out—
One would fill a dish.
Off again, on again,
Down again, and up;
Rivers and lakes are fine
To dine at or sup.
But life for me reaps best,
East, or West I look,
By God's own handiwork—
Little Meadow Brook.

Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Busteed of Winter Hill, Mass., renewed their subscription Tuesday. They have been visiting their niece, Mrs. Myron Gilmon, and visiting in Lovell. They enjoy their Maine visit each year.

George Coe of Lovell dropped in Wednesday. He was on his way home from Augusta, where he had been in attendance at the American Legion convention. Next year the convention will be held at Calais.

One of our subscribers in a nearby town in sending in her subscription renewal, writes as follows: "I wish to say, I think the story "The Rise of Tom Hadley" a fine one."

Two contributions for the "Lost and Found" department have been received at this office this week. One was a baseball glove, picked up near Leroy Sillers and the other was a child's coat, which was found in a car, parked on Main St., Monday evening.

The Norway Power Boat Association have ordered posters advertising boat races at Lake Pennesseewassee, Labor Day. There are five classes, A, B, C, Family, and Free-for-all. The Mothers' Club are to serve dinner at [illegible].

E. B. Lane of Berlin, N. H., [illegible] for some Advertisers, sent us [illegible] ture of the well and [illegible] C. A. Stephen's place. On the reverse side he writes: "'The Old Oaken Bucket', The Laboratory, Norway, Maine. Photo by E. B. Lane." Thanks.

Rev. Carl Weist of Mount Vernon, N. Y., and North Lovell, called, Wednesday, and renewed his subscription to the Advertiser. He said he wanted to know what his friends in this section of Maine were doing the winter months. Mr. Weist who is spending the summer at North Lovell, will return to New York next week to take up his duties at the Community Church at Mount Vernon.

Dr. Marcus A. Browlson of Center Lovell writes us a note of appreciation: "Kindly print the following item. As this will be the last I will send you this summer, I wish to express my sincere gratitude for your courtesy in publishing the notices of our community services. This has materially increased the attendance at the meetings and so extended the benefit and influence of our attempts to reach many persons in this vicinity and far beyond, with the Gospel Message delivered."

S. C. Ridlon of North Bridgton and his brother, W. N. Ridlon of Medford, Mass., made a pleasant call Wednesday afternoon and each subscribed for the paper. They expected a ball game might be in the air, but Norway played away from home and they were disappointed. W. N. Ridlon is spending his annual vacation in North Bridgton, where he lived some years. He left there forty-two years ago, but the annual visit is to keep him in touch with early acquaintances. His son, George, is also spending the vacation there.

Camping all night in front of Hills Jewelry Store for a Dollar Day bargain, was the experience of Irving Morey. He had his eyes on a lady's wrist watch and got it. He took up his position near the door at 8 o'clock Friday night and remained on guard until the streets were deserted, except for the night cop. After this, an automobile parked opposite the store, was his bed-room. One or two early birds put in appearance for the same watch, but they gave up the quest after finding Morey on the job. When the store opened Saturday, the lone watcher secured the coverted timepiece and saved something like $11.00.

Our old friend, John D. Cole of Jamaica Plain, Mass., brought his annual greetings to the office this week. John lived here before going railroading, thirty-two years ago, in and around Boston. He started on the steam cars, then changed to horse cars and for many years has been motorman on three electric surface car lines. Older persons will recall John handling the controller crank on the Norway-Paris street railway before automobles killed the project. The visitor is taking his vacation from the Boston Elevated Co., and plans to remain until Sept. 4, with his brother, Harry V. Cole and wife and his mother, Mrs. William C. Cole.

Selden H. Kilgore of Topeka, Kansas, and George A. Kilgore of Los Angeles, Cal., called in Thursday. They are brothers and are spending several months in New England, looking up genealogical records of the Kilgore family. George went from his home in California to Kansas by train, where he and his brother, Selden, left by auto, July 21. They have spent a week in Boston and plan to be back in Kansas early next month. Selden has traced lineage from Joseph Kilgore, who came to Boston from Scotland around 1718, he going to Kittery, married there in 1721 and had eleven children, most of whom spread into Maine. These brothers' father, Samuel Kilgore, was born in Newry in 1806 and died in Smithville, Me., in 1899 at the age of 93 years.

Mrs. Lottie A. E. Young of South Medford, Mass., says: "I am sending 50c for 'The Norway Advertiser.' I received your sample paper of the Norway Advertiser and I thank you very much for it. Some time ago I saw a piece of news in the paper about the Willey family and about the landslide. Well, if that person who spoke about it, named Willey, remembered a neighbor that lived right close by to them, named Edward Melcher, who saw that accident, he said if they had remained in their own dwelling house (the Willey family) would have been saved but they wouldn't heed him and went to their cave and were lost. This Edward Melcher was my father's father (my grandfather). I heard them talk about it. It was terrible. My grandfather outlived them all. He have some books printed from it but I can't seem to find it."

Mason H. Stone, Jr. of North Lovell was here, Saturday. He is interested in selling the Dart Runabouts and plans this fall to run a few ads. in the Advertiser and continue same next spring. These are a special make of motor boat. The Stone family live in Newton, Mass., winters and spend the summers at North Lovell.

W. L. Button, secretary of the World's Fair at North Waterford, has ordered printing for that show on Oct. 3-4. The fair is more than a local gathering on the village green and has reached the dignity of a creditable exhibition on par with more pretentious cattle shows. Premiums to the amount of $700 are inducements to fill all departments, especially in the hall, where vegetables, fruit, needlework, and kitchen products occupy conspicuous places.

The delegation from the Congregational church to the conference at Cobbosseecontee returned Monday after a week of instruction and recreation at the Y. M. C. A. camp. Those who attended were Jonathan Bartlett, Robert Frost, Francis Howe, Miss Rubira Sharon, Miss Althea Millett and Ernest Moores.

They are brothers and are spending several months in New England, looking up genealogical records of the Kilgore family. George left from his home in California to Kansas by train, where he and his brother, Selden, left by auto, July 21. They have spent a week in Boston and plan to be back in Kansas early next month. Selden has traced lineage from Joseph Kilgore, who came to Boston from Scotland around 1718, he going to Kittery, married there in 1721 and had eleven children, most of whom spread into Maine. These brothers' father, Samuel Kilgore, was born in Newry in 1806 and died in Smithville, Me., in 1899 at the age of 93 years.

Mrs. Lottie A. E. Young of South Medford, Mass., says: "I am sending 50c for The Norway Advertiser.' I received some sample paper of the Norway Advertiser and I thank you very much for it. Some time ago I saw a piece of news in the paper about the Willey family and about the landslide. Well, if that person who spoke about it, named Willey, remembered a neighbor that lived right close by to them, named Edward Melcher, who saw that accident, he said if they had remained in their own dwelling house (the Willey family) would have been saved but they wouldn't heed him and went to their cave and were lost. This Edward Melcher was my father's father (my grandfather). I heard them talk about it. It was terrible. My grandfather outlived them all. He have some books printed from it but I can't seem to find it."

Mason H. Stone, Jr. of North Lovell was here, Saturday. He is interested in selling the Dart Runabouts and plans this fall to run a few ads. in the Advertiser and continue same next spring. These are a special make of motor boat. The Stone family live in Newton, Mass., winters and spend the summers at North Lovell.

W. L. Button, secretary of the World's Fair at North Waterford, has ordered printing for that show on Oct. 3-4. The fair is more than a local gathering on the village green and has reached the dignity of a creditable exhibition on par with more pretentious cattle shows. Premiums to the amount of $700 are indicements to fill all departments, especially in the hall, where vegetables, fruit, needlework, and kitchen products occupy conspicuous places.

The delegation from the Congregational church to the conference at Cobbossee contee returned Monday after a week of instruction and recreation at the Y. M. C. A. camp. Those who attended were Jonathan Bartlett, Robert Frost, Francis Howe, Miss Rubira Sharon, Miss Althea Millett and Ernest Moores.

The track at the fair grounds has been put into excellent condition by brushing and constant sprinkling. The way the articles were taken, etc., indicates it to be the work of a bear.

Several matters of importance were discussed and will be further considered. The relief committee reported Mrs. Nina Felt making good recovery at the C. M. G. Hospital, Lewiston. It was voted to postpone the proposed summer sale until later, and at the present time, to have an "Earn a Dollar" campaign, and each member is asked to earn a dollar to be handed in October 10th with a story or account of how they were earned.

Homemade candy was on sale and a good sum netted. The committee included Mrs. Agnes McCready and Mrs. Ruth Huston, Norway, and Mrs. Donald Mason and Mrs. Rose Butts of South Paris.

On "A Pioneer of Universalism"

From the Lewiston Journal, Written by A. G. Staples

When I was a lad and in an atmosphere of Universalism, which was the fact, the name of Slyvanus Cobb was common on the lips of the faithful.

He died in 1866, in Boston, and so far as we are concerned, his fame was less than that of his son, Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., writer of stories for the New York Ledger—the first tales of adventure and of super-fiction that the lads of the seventies were permitted to read in liberal households.

Perhaps there was no writer of all time more abundantly advertised than was Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., for Robert Bonner was the veriest Barnum of his day in advertising. He believed in it as did all successful men of the period. Not long ago, Mr. C. H. K. Curtis said to us, "I hired money; always hired money and spent it on advertising. By that means I got more money to spend on advertising, by reason of what I spent."

"The Gunmaker of Moscow"; that is the only title of Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. that we can recall at this moment—but the thrill of the tale lingers yet in memory; we had so little of the stuff that Edgar Wallace now turns out. "What do you mean", said a book-purchaser to the book clerk. "This is yesterday's Edgar Wallace. I want today's."

It was perhaps more reprehensible in Sylvanus Cobb, Jr's. fiction proclivities that he was the son of a clergyman; though the orthodox shook their heads sadly and said, "What else can you expect of the son of a Universalist clergyman. To be writing lies. To be corrupting youth by fiction. To be writing novels."

It was the habit of the Universalist of the times to lean backward in daily life, lest his backslidings might be attributed to his faith—no hell, whatsoever. He would be prudent lest it might hurt the church. The Baptist might backslide—the church would care for him and by a certain process of mercy would save him seventy times seven from the brimstone pit. But the Universalist had no such anchor. He scouted a fiery future and there was no precipice from which to draw him away. So he was bound to go over. It was also rumored, in those days of free-drinking, that the S. Cobb, Jr. was addicted to alcoholic beverage, during which he wrote these wonderful tales. Truth is, that Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. was an Edgar Wallace and an S. S. Van Dine before his day—a man of genius in plot and in grandiose writing peculiar to his day—yet in advance of all others.

His father made hoop-poles at a cent apiece in Norway, Me., to get books and stationery for his schooling. We do not know how much it may be worth to make hoop-poles or hop-poles, but a cent is not so much either way. His parents were third generation descendants of the Cobbs who came to Plymouth on the next boat after the Mayflower; or rather on the second voyage of the Mayflower. I have heard my grandmother tell what a grand preacher was Sylvanus Cobb—Universalist. Dr. George W. Quimby, idol if my Grandmother, editor of the Gospel Banner was a devout admirer of the elder Cobb. Well do I remember Dr. Quimby and somewhat do I fear him as memory reverts; for we always "owed" something on the Banner and its payment was a severe test of the family purse.

Sylvanus Cobb was a poet and a writer, which accounts for his gifted son's leanings. The first Universalist church in Maine was built in Norway, and when Cobb was sixteen years old, (1814) he espoused the cheerful faith, that has now been usurped by orthodoxy, which no longer mentions a practical hell. In those days, believe me, it meant something to be a Universalist. It was almost equal to wearing the Scarlet Letter on the breast.

When Cobb went to teach school, he was found to be qualified in every branch. He was a great scholar and had a marvelous mind. But the orthodox examiner wrote a "P. S." on the certificate, that the young man, although legally qualified held a certain opinion on certain matter and that so far as the examiner went "he could not consistently commit a child to one of such religious sentiments".

So—when Cobb was 22 years he went over to Portsmouth, away from Norway, Me., to study for the ministry with Sebastian Streeter an early Universalist preacher. And then he came to Winthrop, Maine, to preach there beginning on June 28th, 1820, the year that Maine became a State of Maine.

And then Cobb became the pioneer of Universalism in Maine. Every June 28th, the Maine church should observe a day of memorial to this valiant old hero—ostracised among the orthodox, revered among the growing membership of the faith. And what a subject those old-timers had—the doctrine of God's mercy; his Love; his non-cruelty; and the denial of the lakes of brimstone and eternal death.

He spent eight years here in Maine—fruitfully for the Church and then went to Malden, Mass. They changed a Unitarian church into Universalist in order to get Sylvanus Cobb as preacher.

But at heart Sylvanus Cobb was more newspaper man and journalist than he was preacher—great as he was in the pulpit. He saw the power of the printed word and the brief period of existence of the spoken word. He began to publish in Waltham, Mass., a religious paper—the Christian Freeman. It stood for Universalism, total abstinence and anti-slavery—all this in 1839. He had served in the Massachusetts Legislature for two terms and was accused of mixing politics and religion—mostly because he was always with advanced liberalism. But one thing this doughty old timer always did. He was always champion and always fought for advanced thought on three fundamentals—anti-drink; anti-Hell; anti-slavery. Now "anti-Hell" does not mean, even in Cob's thesis escape from punishment for sins, but it was directed against frightening people into formalism, by picturing tortures after death in an "unsaved" state.

He carried on two great debates in his paper—one with Dr. Nehemiah Adams on "The Scripturalness of Future Endless Punishment" and another with Dr. Edward Hudson on "Human Destiny", Dr. Hudson believing in "annihilation" after death.

It is not our purpose to give a biography of Dr. Cobb, but rather to suggest the changes in religious thought in protestantism since that day. They debated endless punishment—seriously, and always. When the churches stopped preaching penalties, it lost membership—no doubt of that. One's youth in those days was beset by fears. By night he tossed his bed—fearing himself to be "lost" endlessly. Camp-meetings were made ecstatic by the children who were "rescued" through confession and repentance, of they knew not what. And we have seen old sinners, edging to the mercy seat and finally beating their heads on earth amid the throes of the casting-out of the devils of sin—then a very practical matter. And none the less practical now—though differently exercised.

We would that some vivid writer would honestly relate the story of that period of the incoming of Universalism in New England—for it is so interesting—so practical; so humorous in a good way; so important. View its effect on childhood—so important, also.

Happening to see a mention of Sylvanus Cobb, these suggestions have come to us. Cobb was not a "fanciful" speaker; heavy, and diligently powerful, rather than interesting. But he was a picture. We have heard our "folks" tell of him—massive head, Websterian-looking; 6 feet, two; commanding presence.

He married a Hallowell girl, Eunice Hale Waite, by whom he had nine children. We wonder if there be any descendants of this Maine man hereabout today. If so they may well be proud of their ancestor.

PER CAPITA MEAT CONSUMPTION SHOWS INCREASE IN 1930

The consumption of meat in the United States in increasing. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, is authority for this statement.

According to figures furnished by the Bureau, meat consumption for the first five months of 1930 shows an increase over the average of the same periods for the past seven years. These figures are based on the number of Federally-inspected slaughter animals and net imports, but do not include exports or re-exports or changes in cold storage holdings.

The average total consumption of all meats, beef, veal, pork, lamb and mutton—for the first five months of the years 1923 to 1929 inclusive, was 5,057,415,000, as compared to 5,083,055,000 pounds for the first five months of 1930.

The increased consumption of meat is due in part to the fact that more meat is coming onto the market. For a good many years the production of meat animals has not kept pace with growth in population. The increased demand for meat and meat products has resulted in increased production of cattle, sheep, and hogs, according to Charles D. Carey, chairman of the National Live Stock and Meat Board, Chicago.

Another factor influencing greater use of meat is the modern trend in the field of nutrition. New discoveries of the food value of meat, as for example, liver in the treatment of anemia, have caused the pendulum of dietics to swing back from the extremes of a few years ago to a more liberal inclusion of meat in the diet.

Incidentally, and of special interest to the consumer, the retail price of meat is lower than it has been for a good many years.

An exchange asks: "What has become of the old-fashioned woman who used to like to cook and sew and darn socks?" Well, whoever said she liked it anyway?

NORTH PARIS

Andrews Family Reunion

This poety was composed and committed to memory by W. W. Andrews of Portland on the occasion of the Andrews reunion held at the "Old Home" in Tuell Town, August 24th.

We have come from far and near,
To this old familiar spot,
And again we glimpse some changes
That the passing years have wrought.
Some old land-marks that we cherished
In the days long since gone by,
Now have vanished from our vision.
Yet we seek with eager eye,
For some trace of what in childhood
We enjoyed so much to view,
Scenes that filled us with emotions,
Such as only childhood knew.
Homes where once was song and laughter,
Mingled oft with grief and pain,
Founded by our early settlers,
Dotted many a hill and plain.
On these hillsides, sloping downward
To the valleys in between,
Some of them now lie in ruins,
And the fields that once had been.
Plowed and fitted for the sower,
Yield no longer ripened grain,
Or the fruit of vine and orchard.
Little less than weeds remain.
Many stand as yet, though bruised and scarred.
Through years of constant wear.
While those within likewise have seen
In years of toil and care.
The creeping babe to manhood grown,
To fill the vacant chair,
Of him who occupied that seat,
But abides no longer there.
Some scenes there are that please the eye.
That give to us a thrill.
Not only when the paint and brush
Reveal the artist's skill,
But also when these hills and vales
Are clad in verdant green,
And the landscape, stretching far and wide.
Seems so tranquil and serene.
These rugged hills of ancient mould.
On which we love to gaze,
Are just as pleasing to the eye
As they were in childhood days.
These fertile Vales of varied hue,
Through which in seeming glee,
The mountain streams wind in and out.
Until they reach the sea.
Are just as fair to look upon
As in the years when we,
As little children, used to lie
Stretched out beneath some tree.
And wonder how the Infinite
Could out of chaos mould.
A universe in which He caused
All nature to unfold.
Her beauty that o'erspreads the earth
As from it spring to light
The flowers that bud and blossom
And make this old world bright.
Thus nature gives her very best
With which to please the eye.
We find it in the earth beneath
And likewise in the sky.
What could there be more gorgeous,
When at the close of day
The sun sinks down behind the hills
And daylight fades away.
Than the grandeur of that picture
In its variegated hue,
With its clouds of golden texture
In a sea of azure blue.
There's no artist with his easel,
Should he presume to try,
That could duplicate that picture
Richly colored in the sky.
And when the sun no longer
Sends forth his rays of light,
And we feel the chill of evening
And the quietude of night,
We've but to gaze above us,
To the stars that dot the sky,
When we view another picture
Quite as pleasing to the eye.
They seem like dazzling jewels,
Set in a vast expanse,
Extending far beyond our sight,
Into realms of pure romance.
They glorify the name of Him
Whose wisdom is Divine,
Who placed them in the firmament
And caused their light to shine.
The light by which the shepherds
Were guided on their way,
To where the little Christ child
In swaddling vesture lay.
Thus in the realm of nature
As well as that of man,
We find that the Creator
Has included in his plan,
A world in which his handiwork
O'erspreads the earth and sky,
And through it we are ever led,
His name to glorify.
Man has added by his genius,
Much to beautify the land,
Yet he too has wrought destruction.
As he sought, with axe in hand,
To deface the virgin forest
By laying low its trees,
That bowed their rugged branches
To every passing breeze.
We've but to search these hillsides
And the valleys down below,
To discover that the forests
Of some thirty years ago,
Have lost their former splendor.
For not oft do we espy,
The stately oak and pine trees
With their branches lifted high.
But in their stead have risen
From out the mixed debris,
Tall weeds and other refuse
With many a half grown tree.
The changes we have mentioned
Wrought by nature and by man
Were planned by the Creator
Some of which we understand:
Yet how meager is our knowledge
Of the mysteries, so rife,
That exist without exception
In every form of life.
There is mystery all about us,
In the sunshine and the rain,
In the flowers that bud and blossom.
In the sheaves of golden grain.
But the mystery of creation
Is most mystical by far,
How we came to have a being,
How developed as we are.
From the tiny, helpless infant
Without power to walk or run,
To the men of thought and action.
Who have many a victory won.
In the field of art and science.
In the realm of fine romance,
In the busy mart of commerce
And the sphere of high finance.
Even they with all their efforts
To cast aside the veil,
And reveal to us the mysteries,
Of life, have seemed to fail.
Though we cannot probe the mystic
That prevails on every hand,
We find that we are given
All we need to understand.
We know that life is real,
That through it all the way,
From the years of early childhood
Up to the present day.
We've found that it has meaning,
That it is no empty dream,
And that its stern realities
Are far from what they seem.
So we will rest contented
With what knowledge we may gain,
As we wrestle with life's problems
Through the years that yet remain.
And rather seek enjoyment
In what nature still reveals,
In the grandeur of the mountains,
The forests and the fields.
In the home with friends and loved ones.
Bound by many a sacred tie,
Sharing one another's burdens
As the years go swiftly by.
That is why we're drawn together
On this peaceful Sabbath day,
And, in memory, we shall cherish.
Though brief must be our stay,
The privilege of greeting those
Whose friendship we hold dear,
In the hope that this reunion
For which we've gathered here.
May bind us still more closely
As relatives and friends,
By ties that naught can sever
Until this brief life ends.
While we cannot read the future
And its secrets understand,
We trust we may be granted
Through the year that's now at hand.
Both strength of mind and body,
That in normal health we may
Meet again our friends and kindred.
On the next reunion day.

Race Drivers DEMAND the TIRES WE SELL!

THE Indianapolis 500 Mile Endurance Race is famous as an endurance test and battle of tires for no driver can win this race who has tire trouble. He races over a hot brick track at a speed of 100 or more miles per hour. For eleven consecutive years Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have been on the winning cars.

FOR years the winner of the hazardous race of Pike's Peak climb—where a slip meant death—used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

Firestone GUM-DIPPED TIRES

Hold All World's Records on Road and Track for

SAFETY, MILEAGE, SPEED and ENDURANCE

—for eleven consecutive years have won the 500-mile Indianapolis Endurance Race.

—were on winning cars in Pike's Peak Race—where a slip meant death.

—were on the Studebaker Car which went 30,000 miles in 26,326 minutes on a board track at Atlantic City in 1928.

—were on the GMC Truck carrying a two-ton load that hung up the Coast-to-Coast Endurance Record.

—ran 71,351 miles on a Detroit Taxicab before the first tire was replaced.

1. THESE drivers do not simply choose Firestone Tires. They demand them. They know by experience that this tire never fails. It never fails because it is built not to fail by the special Firestone processes of tire building.

(a) Every fibre of cotton thread going into the making of the cord fabric, which is the foundation of the tire, is coated and cushioned in rubber by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process.

(b) Under the tread is the Firestone patented Gum-Dipped Double Cord Breaker—which means not only two extra plies where most needed, but also sets the Firestone Tire apart as an all cord tire, while others are woven fabric and cord.

(c) Firestone Super High Speed Tires now have 32% more rubber in the tread, giving deeper grooves that will give you over 50% more non-skid wear before the tire is smooth.

2. THESE are not just features. They are basic differences in tire building proved by service on every kind of road and track.

3. YOU may never intend to race. You may never intend even to speed. You may never climb Pike's Peak. But, every day—whether you know it or not—your life depends upon your tires.

4. WE HAVE these Super High Speed Gum-Dipped Balloons for sale today. They are the same tires that the racing drivers demand—the premier tires of the world. Their first cost is low. Their cost per mile of service makes them cheaper today than even cheap tires. They are inexpensive, not only because the price of rubber is low, but because we have joined with Firestone to bring into the sale of tires the same degree of efficiency which goes into their manufacture. The benefit of all this is in the price to you.

5. DRIVE IN TODAY. We will examine your tires and make you an allowance for your unused mileage. We can equip your car with new Firestone Super High Speed Tires at a much lower cost than you ever expected. They will give you unequalled service and satisfaction.

TRADE IN YOUR USED TIRES TODAY!

Florence Mayberry was injured about her hands and arms while helping her mother wash with the electric washing machine. Her hands got caught in the wringer and drew her arms in before her mother could get to her. She is the nine year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mayberry.

Mrs. Perley Howard has a new radio.

Joseph N. Adams, a native of Stoneham, where he was born in January, 1873, but for many years a resident of this place, died at his home, Tuesday, August 19th. He was the son of the late Joseph and Jane (Hapgood) Adams, and is survived by his wife, two sons, Tom and Curtis, two daughters, Mrs. Elva Perry of Portland, and Mrs. Helen Carpenter of this town. Burial was in the family lot at North Bridgton cemetery.

This is the closing week at the many camps here.

School will begin September 8th in this town.

HELP MAINE CHILDREN

"Maine school children average five decayed teeth per mouth, by actual examination. That means that when the schools open, which time is very soon, more than $25,000 badly decayed teeth will prevent their owners from doing their best work in reading, writing and arithmetic," says the Maine State Department of Health, Division of Dental Hygiene.

"Children with healthy mouths can do better school work than those with unbrushed and decayed teeth. The child who is suffering with a toothache and who is dragged down by the infection from decayed teeth can not apply his mind sufficiently well to keep up with his grade.

"The four rules to keep a healthy mouth are these:

1. Eat a balanced diet containing plenty of fresh vegetables and uncooked fruits, milk and coarse breads.
2. Chew all food thoroughly.
3. Brush the mouth and teeth vigorously at least twice a day.
4. Visit your family dentist at least twice yearly to have your teeth cleaned and repaired.

"Too often parents wait until their child complains of a toothache before taking him to their dentist. Preventive measures—the above rules—practiced regularly will save a great deal of time, trouble and expense.

"If all parents would attend to their children's teeth before school begins, we would have fewer 'repeaters', fewer absences and better report cards."

The Invisible Government

R. L. Cummings of West Paris

James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, during the war, and a man of exceptional ability, states that sixty-four men rule the United States, not one of whom is an office holder. In this statement he is but giving voice to the same idea that was expressed by the Progressive party in 1912 and called "The Invisible Government". In the Boston Globe of today I find another article, or rather several articles from Prof. Robert E. Rogers of M. I. T. and Gamaliel Bradford, Famous Biographer and Historian.

The only conclusion that can be derived from the additional statements of these men is that they but confirm the statements of Gerard although they may differ as to who are the more important heads of this invisible Government. Prof. Rogers says, "Why does Mr. Gerard include Hearst (the owner of that great system of papers) and leave out Brisbane?" I would like to suggest that the answer should be that Brisbane is the hired man of said William Randolf Hearst, and no doubt holds his job by writing editorials satisfactory to Mr. Hearst. Prof. Rogers says: "Gerard lives in fancy in the days of the-public-bedamned Vanderbilt and George Bear of the coal strike".

Only these were fighting days when there were fighters who took business seriously enough to cut its claws. Today there is almost nobody that can attract public attention long enough to tell us exactly what business is doing and what that means. For the moment Business has it all its own way. But the moment some outsider packs enough dynamite to get the public to listen business will climb down and listen to its master's voice as it always has."

Thank God there is one professor that knows the truth and dares to speak it.

This Historian, Gamaliel Bradford with a sharp eye and the countenance that shows the unmistakable student and thinker says: "The inevitable conclusion is that, if Mr. Gerard is right, American Democracy is faced with a situation of the utmost peril."

Good and well. With such men as these beginning to speak out, there is great hope, and much to do. There is a great mass movement that comprehends these things in a dim sort of a way, the same as such things have been in the minds of men before. I believe it now is more so. The idea expressed by these men is the same as I heard expressed by two everyday men a short time ago when the chain store system that "John" worked for was sold out to another larger system. Bill says: "What firm are you working for today?" "Same old firm, Bill." "Are you sure of that, John?" "Well, it goes by the same name, but I guess they have sold out." "Well, I tell you what is coming, Bill. In a little while about six heads will run this country." "Oh, no they won't, John." "I tell you they will." "Oh no, something else will happen." "Well, what will happen?" "Why, them six heads will come off."

Just remember that those wise and troubled heads that succeeded in putting our blessed government in operation feared a monarchy so much that it took a long lesson to bring them to a point where they would submit to the necessary controls essential to form a stable government, and they set their flaming sword that turned all ways at once to the best of their ability to oppose such an event. At the same time they declared that an hereditary monarchy was better than a Plutocracy.

When you go to the polls to vote either at a primary or a regular election, think well whether the candidate you vote for stands for these great moneyed interests. Remember that these men spoken of as the rulers of this country do not hold any public office at all. They only have to spend their money and influence to see that men are placed on the ticket that will act as a rubber stamp for them.

Look for the Banner on the pump

What motorists tell US about the New Socony— BANNER GASOLINE

Quick starting. "I've tried other popular-price gasolines, but none respond so quickly to the starter as your new Banner."

Instant pick-up. "You claim that Banner gives instant pick-up. I'll say you're right. No other gasoline in its price class that I've tried can touch it."

More power. "You feel the extra power in Banner at once. There's an enormous power difference in favor of Banner over other popular-price gasolines."

More miles per gallon. "I'm going to get the most for my money out of the gallons I buy, and I'm getting that with Banner. It's got every other gasoline in its price class beat on mileage."

No knocking. "My car knocked on non-premium gasolines until I tried Banner."

No sticky valves. If there had been, we certainly should have heard about it—and there's not a single letter. Not surprising, since we know Banner is completely gum-free.

We know that all these things that people tell us are facts, for we have proved them by actual road tests made in Portland, Lewiston, Augusta and Bangor, August 7th, 8th, 9th and 11th.

Now there's a Banner around the best popular-price pumps in Norway

IT wasn't enough for the Standard Oil Company of New York to offer motorists the best premium gasoline—Socony Special plus Ethyl.

Motorists wanted the best popular-price gasoline, too—and now they have it—in the New Socony—Banner Gasoline.

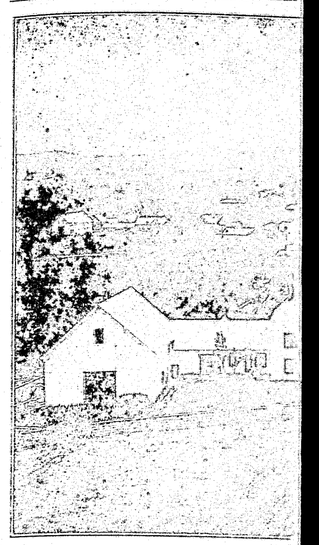

On sale only three weeks. Already motorists are telling US of its quicker starting and pick-up, extra power, greater mileage, absence of knocking and entire freedom from gum.

We didn't ask people to believe these things on our say-so, but to try out the gasoline for themselves. They have—thousands of them—and they are keeping on using it. Every single day more motorists drive up to the Banner pumps—the busiest pumps in town.

Mr. Benton Has a Serious Adventure

Mr. Benton thought it was advisable for his bank's interest that he should go to New York for the purpose of having it received by some of the leading financial concerns there, as an associate moneyed institution, by which it might obtain from time to time, a certain share of stocks and bonds being issued and put upon the market to dispose of to purchasers. The bank directors fell in with his views and he accordingly was authorized to see what could be done in the matter.

Upon his arrival in New York, he went to the office of J. P. Mangum & Co., which had attained a world wide reputation for financial integrity, great business sagacity and very able management. He showed that the Alderburg National Bank, of which he was president, was doing a prosperous business, had a large surplus, and was conservatively managed—all of which was satisfactory and arrangements were made such as Mr. Benton desired.

He ascertained that there had been a recent issue of very desirable stock and bonds, from a sound business corporation, to enlarge its plant. The stock was adjudged to pay at least a ten per cent. dividend, and the bonds drawing six and a half per cent. interest could be obtained for ninety-seven and a half cents on the dollar. Mr. Benton thought it best to get some of this issue, and he bought for the bank, fifteen thousand dollars worth of the stock and ten thousand dollars of the par value of the bonds. A description of the stock and bonds, with their numbers, was left with the bankers to provide against loss, and a copy he took himself with the securities.

The business being completed, Mr. Benton, after supper at a hotel, went aboard the Fall River boat, engaged a stateroom, where he deposited his topcoat and grip, then he went into the waiting room, where he met a couple of Boston business men, whom he knew and engaged in conversation with them, till it was time to retire for the night.

Mr. Benton had noticed during the evening, a couple of suspicious appearing characters, who seemed to take more interest in him than the occasion warranted. At first he couldn't understand why they did so, but after a time it dawned upon his mind that their attention boded no good to him. It did not seem possible that the two scoundrelly looking men knew that he had with him valuable securities, which they might obtain by robbery, yet he reflected that they might have seen him come out of the office of the great financial concern with his grip in his hand, and concluded—which was true enough—that he had taken away in it bonds or other valuable effects which they determined, if possible, to get possession of. He decided that in any event, it was wise not to give them any opportunity to encounter him anywhere alone, and acted accordingly.

Before Mr. Benton left his stateroom the next morning, he tacked his certificates of stock and the memorandum of the bonds he had obtained to the pocket of his inside flannel shirt, but left the bonds on account of their bulk, in his grip. He was careful to keep in the company of those he knew when boarding and leaving the Fall River and Boston train. In the latter city he had taken a cab for his railroad station, and having seen nothing of the suspects, he felt certain on entering the car that he would not have to get out of till he reached Alderburg, that he had eluded them.

On arriving at the Alderburg station, not finding Charley there with his car to take him to his office at the bank and home, Mr. Benton started up street on foot. Tom saw him get off the train and lifted his hat in recognition, which the magnate acknowledged with a bow. Supposing that Charley was near at hand for his father, Tom paid no attention to Mr. Benton's movements. While putting the express packages into his wagon, Tom noticed two evil looking persons come out of the smoking car and make off up street. They wore brown derbys, and were puffing away at their cigars. The train was held at the Alderburg station something like half an hour, for a freight train to arrive and pass. Tom made his express deliveries, which happened to be very few, and in the lower part of the village, and had just put up his horse, when Charley appeared and asked whether he had seen anything of his father. Tom told him that he saw Mr. Benton get off the train, and thinking that he (Charley) was not far away—perhaps with Betty—he did not notice where his father went and asked: "Have you been to the bank?"

Charley: "No, but he isn't likely to be there. I thought he would wait here for me."

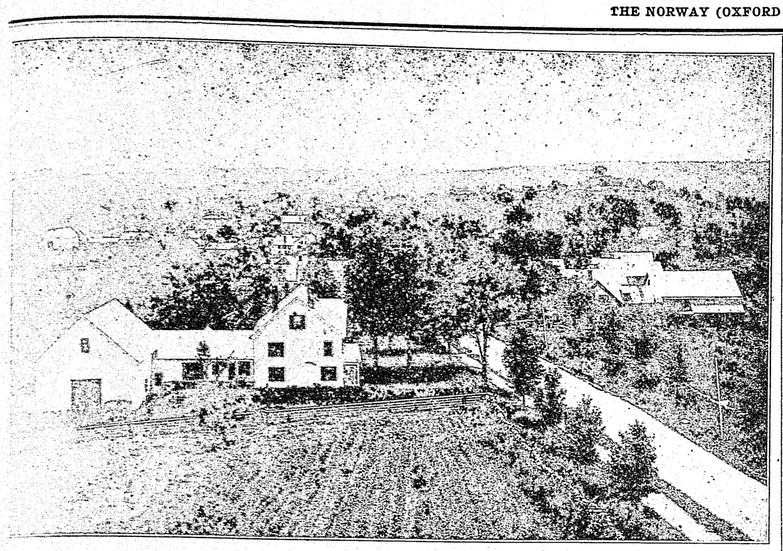

Tom: "There must be something wrong, Charley. Your father don't loaf around in any of the stores or the station, but would be very sure to go to his office at the bank. Have you keys to the bank and his office?"

Charley: "Yes, I carry them with me all the time."

Tom: "Then let us lose no time in getting there." The thought of the two suspicious looking characters he had seen come from the smoking car and go up the street flashed into Tom's mind, and he feared foul play. He asked: "How happened you to be late?"

Charley: "My old watch run down. Mother said I was late and I got to the station as quick as I could. I fear something has happened to dad."

Upon reaching the bank and going into Mr. Benton's private office, they found him unconscious, lying upon the floor with feet and hands tied, a gag in his mouth, and blood dripping from a wound in his scalp. Charley burst into tears, exclaim-

Charley burst into tears, exclaiming: "My good father, my carelessness has brought you to this. Oh my father. My good father. What shall I do?"

Tom: "Get some water and a piece of cloth, Charley, while I remove the gag from his mouth and cut the cords from his arms and legs." This he quickly did and taking off his own coat, Tom folded it up and placed it under the head of the injured man, who, though unconscious, was slowly breathing. Charley soon reappeared with a dish of water and a towel. On his knees Tom washed the blood from Mr. Benton's wound and face, and found that he had received a blow on the head from some weapon—presumably a slungshot—which fortunately had not cracked the skull. It was a glancing blow, or it might have been a very serious injury. Tom placed his hand over Mr. Benton's heart and found that it beat almost regularly and naturally.

The wounded man, ere long, opened his eyes to see both the boys in tears, kneeling beside him. He looked from one to the other, inquiringly. They could only ejaculate as with one impulse: "Thank God!" Soon the recollection of what had occurred came into the magnate's mind and he was helped into his easy chair. When he could talk connectedly he told how he had been followed from New York by two suspicious and evil looking men, and how he had supposed that he had eluded them, but on going into his private office at the bank, to deposit the stock and bonds he had obtained, the scoundrels had followed him in and assaulted him with a slungshot—striking him such a blow on the head that it rendered him senseless and that he knew nothing more till he had come to a few minutes before.

THE CONDUCTOR

As the object of the assault was plainly for the purpose of robbing Mr. Benton, the next thing was to ascertain whether anything had been stolen. An examination of the grip, which lay on the floor, showed that the thieves had taken the bonds, but the certificates of stock and the memorandum, pinned to the pocket of his flannel shirt, had not been touched. Mr. Benton was very anxious that nothing should be known outside his family, that he had been assaulted and robbed. He rapidly recovered his strength, and was taken home, where he allayed the anxiety of his wife and daughter as much as possible, by telling them that he was not seriously hurt, that there was no necessity to send for a physician and that he would be all right in a day or two. The wound in his scalp was treated to an antiseptic wash and no serious effects resulted from the injury.

Tom insisted that the robbers should be followed and the stolen bonds recovered, if possible, but Mr. Benton said that by acquainting J. P. Mangum & Co. with their loss, they would take measures to stop any payments upon them and in time, if the bonds were not got back, new ones in place of them would be issued, yet it would be better if they could be obtained of the thieves at once, and that he and Charley might try to get them, if they could do so without bloodshed, and the bringing of the culprits back to Alderburg for trial, for on no account did he desire the notoriety of such an affair at that time.

Tom was confident that the robbers had had time after assaulting Mr. Benton to board the train, on which they had come to Alderburg, and that at Huntington, they would get off to take the down train going southwest through Scranton, so that if he and Charley could get to Scranton, first, they might intercept them there. He knew that there was a difference of an hour and a half between these two trains at Huntington, and that the robbers, when they reached there, would have to wait some three quarters of an hour or more. Much time had been spent in getting Mr. Benton in condition to be carried home, but taking everything that had happened into consideration, Tom judged—though it would be a "close shave" if the train was on time—that they might reach Scranton before the afternoon down train did, provided that Charley's racer would stand the strain of being run at its topmost speed. Charley was excitedly anxious to try it, saying that his car on a good road could make eighty-five miles an hour, but Tom knew from experience that there was no part of the road from Alderburg to the Lakeport-Scranton road good enough for such terrific speed, yet there were considerable distances that would bear a rate of speed from forty to sixty miles an hour.

Equipped with a couple of loaded revolvers, Charley and Tom whirled away over the ridge southward. Charley had to slow up where the road lacked smoothness, and teams and cars were met or passed, but otherwise his car fairly flew over the way, under his excited push and guidance. When they struck the Lakeport-Scranton road, the best track was found, and over it the highest speed was attained. When Charley slowed up at the Scranton station, they ascertained that they were some fifteen minutes ahead of the train. They hastily formed a plan of procedure, which modified by circumstances, was carried out. Judging that the robbers, if on the train, would be in the smoking car, the young men watched to see whether they got off at that station.. Noting that none answering to the description of the criminals did so, Tom followed the passengers who went into the smoking car and seeing the two suspects he had noticed get off the train at Alderburg, in the rear end of the car, smoking and reading a newspaper, he hastily turned and with Charley went into the next car and took seats near the door.

The train was soon in motion and the conductor, having taken the tickets of those in the smoking car who had boarded the train at Scranton, came into the car, where Tom and Charley were. They paid their fare to the next station and told the conductor that there were a couple of men in the smoking car, who had assaulted and robbed the president of the Alderburg national bank and had in their possession the securities stolen, which they were anxious to secure with the criminals. He replied that they might go ahead and do so and would have plenty of assistance if they should require it. They went at once into the smoking car and were followed by a resolute appearing fellow, who had heard what had been said between them and the conductor, and was anxious to be of assistance where such a scrimmage was likely to take place.

Advancing with rapid strides towards the rear end of the car, Tom whipped out of his pockets the loaded revolvers, and with one in each hand presenting them within a few feet of the villains' heads, in a determined voice he shouted: "Up! Up! with you instantly, and hold out your hands, you New York gangsters and murderers, or I'll bore holes through you. Up! Up! You scoundrels!"

They looked into the face of a determined young man backed by two assistants and two murderous looking weapons, pointed straight at their heads and they wisely concluded that their safety depended upon their complying with Tom's demands and instantly obeyed.

"Where are your firearms and slungshot?" demanded Tom. The robbers replied that they were in their hip pockets and the stranger, who had followed them, gathered the articles in and handed them to Charley. By this time the occupants of the car were on their feet and excitedly talking.

Tom next demanded to know where the bonds they had stolen were and upon their replying that each had half of them in his inside shirt pocket, the stranger promptly secured them. Upon examination it was found that all of the bonds had been given up, and they were passed over to Charley.

"Now, you scoundrels, you can lower your hands," said Tom—(to Charley)—"Take one of their guns and guard them while I go to the conductor and have him signal ahead to the next station for an officer to take charge of these robbers."

As soon as Tom had disappeared, Charley engaged in conversation with the stranger, telling him that he would be required as a witness at the trial of the thieves, and taking out his memorandum book, began to write his name—"Ben Billings of Woodstock"—when the robbers bolted for the car door and running down the steps hurled themselves out into the bushes beyond the railroad track. Charley yelled:

"Stop 'em; Stop the gangsters," and hurrying to the door fired several times after them, which of course he did not design that either shot should take effect in their miserable carcasses. The bystanders, however, took the whole affair as a serious matter. Upon hearing the shots, Tom returned to the smoking car to find that Charley had admirably played his part and the robbers had been gotten rid of as Mr. Benton had desired and he put a five dollar bill into Billings' hand for the assistance he had rendered.

At the next station on an up train, Tom and Charley returned to Scranton, and soon thereafter, were on their way to Alderburg, where they arrived late at night at the Benton home.

Maude and her mother, who had been wainting their return with considerable anxiety, were greatly relieved that they had got back unhurt and were much gratified at their having secured the stolen bonds.

Mr. Benton was resting quietly when Charley and Tom reached the house, but upon hearing the sound of voices in the dining room, which had awakened him. he sounded a call bell to let the family know that he was awake and desired to ascertain the result of the young men's adventure. Charley went to him and put the stolen bonds into his hands, and while he was telling his father all about their daring feat, Maude had an opportunity to speak with Tom alone. She told him what her father had said of his finding Tom's coat under his head when he recovered consciousness and he on his knees with tears in his eyes, washing the blood from the wound on his head, and she added: "Father was proud of you before, but this has endeared you to him for he knows now that you care for him as a son for a father. Now let me advise you where you and Charley have been engaged in any undertaking, don't give all the praise to him. Father, mother and I know that Charley does finely when he is with you to plan and lead. We admire your disinclination to boast, but permit me to say, when you relate what you two do, tell a simple story of what happens, without any colorings, leaving us to add the tints and shades." Tom was so affected that he couldn't speak, but grasping her hand, pressed it warmly, and she knew that he understood and would heed.

As soon as he could find his voice he said that he ought to go at once to his boarding place, as Bessie and Mrs. Morton would be anxious about what had happened to him. She replied that he mustn't think of going away till after breakfast in the morning, and that Bob came to the house early in the evening to inquire if they knew where he was, and was informed that he and Charley had been suddenly called away on an important matter and wouldn't be back till late, and for Mrs. Morton and Bessie not to expect him till after breakfast the next morning. This information greatly relieved Tom's mind.

They were interrupted by Charley, who brought a message from his father, stating that he wished to see Tom. Going to Mr. Benton's bedside, Tom anxiously inquired how he was, and was told that he would be all right in a day or two, when he would be out and about his business. He said he was very much gratified at the recovery of the stolen bonds; that there would have to be no trial of the offenders and no publicity about the affair; and that it had been accomplished without his or Charley getting injured.

"Of course, my boy," he said, "you must stay with us tonight. We couldn't have you go away for anything, but I want you to know before you sleep, that you have endeared yourself to us all, and to me particularly, by what you have done for me today. I shall not forget it. In fact I can't well get along without you. I see my boy that your heart is full and there is no need of any explanations. Good night."

GREENWOOD

There is a little valley,
A precious jewel rare,
That nestles 'tween the mountains,
And God has placed it there.
It is a mecca to the weary,
A land of golden dreams,
Where the wandering traveler lingers
To rest by the woodland streams.
In this little valley,
Men have bravely fought and won
The uneven battle of life,
That others have just begun.
It is the places like this
That have risen above the strife,
To teach strong men and women
The way to a broader, truer life.

THE USUAL WAY

By W. H. Lord

Two boys went to the city
To spend an hour or two;
One was a rustic bush-whacker,
The other a lover true.

The lover drove the "lizzie,"
The bush-whacker, beside,
Played to the accompaniment,
With a lover's pride.

They rolled into the city,
It was a rainy day,
But the good old Ford was going
On in the usual way.

Cadillacs, Grays and Buicks,
With bumpers, power and all,
Seemed to push aside the lizzie,
For it was so small.

But, when it came to hard spots
The little old Ford would say,
"Give me the gas, and I'll show them,"
That is the usual way.

SEPTEMBER DAYS

Sometimes the skies are blue as June,
A bird sings now and then,
And late flowers in the garden bring
The summer days again.

A butterfly with wings of white
Still makes its little round,
And on the quiet air is heard
The crickets' cheerful sound.

But other signs there are that tell
The chilling frosts are nigh,
When withered vines hang brown and sere
And wandering leaves sail by.

O happy,—when the skies are grey
And winds are out of tune—
Is he who still can hear the song
And dream the dreams of June!
—ALMA PENDEXTER HAYDEN.
